The new Pop Art Gallery, with its new interpretation of POP (Paint On Print), offers a completely new kind of pop art. Artists such as Warhol and Lichtenstein picked up industrial production and printing processes and caricatured them by creating industrial advertising as individual art, or they reduced the technique of four-color printing to their very own presentation of the image pixels.

Paint on Print
now reverses this path: industrially manufactured products are subsequently customized and perfected in elaborate handwork. Also in contrast to the industrial methods, the artwork is limited, each artwork title and size is used only 500 times. Each work of art is accompanied by a certificate of authenticity, signed by the artist, and each work is hand signed and numbered, and thus a unique one. In addition to that each work and certificate are secured by a hologram security sticker.

What does new POP Art stand for?

POP stands for "Paint On Print", which means that some areas of the printed canvas are painted with acrylic colours. To give you an idea how that works, here is the way to a work of art!

In contrast to a regular painting not the entire picture, but only individual parts are processed in acrylic technique. This creates a tension between the extensive coloured canvas structures and the individual areas with individual brush strokes, thus creating the unique piece of art. This uniqueness is confirmed by a certification. Each work of art is limited to 500 copies of each size. Each picture is hand signed by the artist and marked with the respective number. In addition, this is confirmed by a hologram security label with the serial number on the picture and on the certificate.

The first sketches start in the artist's mind and are either brought to paper in an "old-fashioned" way, but often also designed directly on a tablet or smartphone. From many sketches a first design emerges, which is then further developed as a vector graphics artwork in the computer. This is the only way to ensure that the quality is correspondingly high even in large-format printing. Thus one could print theoretically both in the size 30 x 40 centimeters, but also 30 x 40 meters, and it would be guaranteed a consistently high quality and resolution. Further design and adjustments are made on screen, followed by test prints, innumerable versions and various variants arise, until the final version is fixed.

The printout is carried out on special printers, which can display any color nuance with a 10-color system, thus achieving a fantastic printing result on high-quality canvas. The canvas is then stretched by experts by hand and with a lot of fingertip feeling on the wedge frame, only so the high quality and tension the canvas is ensured.

Now the next step in the process of creating the art work is the painting with acrylic technology. Already during the first designs, it is determined which areas are subsequently painted with acrylic paints. In an elaborate procedure the printing inks were matched with the acrylic paints. Anyone who has already dealt with the subject areas of CMYK and RGB in connection with pigment colours knows how difficult this is. Exact matching cannot be achieved precisely because of the two completely different techniques for colour production, and also the respective light conditions or colour temperatures play an important role.

The Certificate

Each piece of art is supplied with a certificate, and even this certificate is already a small work of art. Designed by the artist himself, and arranged in the classic Popart colors, it contains, in addition to the title, the size, the number and a duplicate of the hologram security sticker. On the back of the document a special area is provided with a pop art-typical speech bubble to include congratulations or messages.

The artist:
Juergen Wieshoff

It was 1961 when Roy Lichtenstein left his protracted paths for the first time by painting his comic adaptation "Look Mickey", and Andy Warhol discovered comics with his sketches of Popeye and Superman. Much more unnoticed Juergen Wieshoff was also born out of the world. As a child, he found his love for pop art through comics, which he devoured in vast quantities. He soon became an avid visitor to many international art museums, especially in the USA, but he was disappointed to find that he could not afford a lot of fine works of his idols. Out of desperation he began to paint them himself, and so his first works of art were created.

His works are characterized by a very clear color and form language. This is certainly due to the fact that before completing his studies he graduated as a technical draftsman. In addition, his activity temporarily included work as an industrial designer, during which he received several nominations for design awards. Then came the time when he decided to implement his own ideas, and so the Pop Art Gallery was created for the distribution of his own works. (At the moment, the distribution is limited to his own works, but you never know ...)

into the world.
It doesn't look like a painting
of something,
it looks like the thing itself.

Roy Lichtenstein

Royal Stamps

There are really many stories about Queen Elizabeth, and you do not really need any particular reason to pay homage to such an important person in world history, but there is a special one that particularly impressed the artist:

In 1998, the Crown Prince and later King of Saudi Arabia visited the Queen on her estate in Balmoral. In Saudi Arabia it was then, and by the way, still not allowed, for Woman to drive a vehicle. He was extremely surprised when he was sitting on the passenger seat of the Land Rover, and suddenly the Queen swung herself on the driver's seat and slipped him over her property. The fact that the Queen, through her activity as a driver during WW II, was accustomed to driving fast did not make him feel more comfortable, and he asked desperately by his interpreter to reduce the speed.

The English royal house usually resides with the spread of such anecdotes, but this story was itself confirmed by the prince who thought it was "too funny not to repeat."

Such a fine English humour is simply worthy of a note, right?

And for anyone who wonders which prizes are shown on the "stamps": 1st stands for First Class mail, 42 P (Pence) is the answer to everything according to Doug Adams, 52 P because Queen Elizabeth rose to the throne in 1952, and 90 P, because she celebrated her 90th birthday in 2016.

Oh, Pretty Women

For many people "Pretty Woman" is linked with two things: the film from 1990 with Richard Gere and Julia Roberts, and the song by Roy Orbison from 1965. One of the text lines of the song is: "Pretty Woman, walking down the street", but hardly no one knows how close the relationship between these lines is to the history of the story, and why this has influenced the image of „Oh, Pretty Woman“.

Roy Orbison, they say, sat at home with his buddy Bill Dees, and together they tried to write a new song. Then Roy's wife looked inside and asked for some money because she wanted to go shopping. Whether she got it or not, is not known, but in any case she made her way in high heeled shoes, and the rhythm of her steps brought Roy to the idea of this line and this song. The rest is history.

Of course, this story was not the cause for the picture, but during the creation phase, the artist was looking for a suitable title for his Pop Art work, and when he came across this story, the perfect title was found.

Pretty Woman Quartett One

Pop Art Love Story

Do you remember the seventies? Everyone and everything was full of love, everywhere were signs of hearts, and the four letters L-O-V-E were put on nearly everything. Well, time has changed, and nowadays the most important message of the world is transferred by emojis 😊 and texts, but the point is to JUST SEND the message.

Of course we do have a lot of ideas on that topic! We show love in many colour combinations; so there's something for everyone!

Not to forget our bling bling special edition..take a look!

We also would like to mention that the triptychs can be made out of each colour combination)

Love You! Red-Yellow

Like a tenderly whispered declaration of love, simply "Love You"; there is no way to say it shorter and more beautiful.

The hearts emphasize the "spoken" explanation, whose different size and differentiated arrangement emphasize the heartbeat and the rhythm of love.
